1st Grade

Note from Ms. LeBlanc

This is the last week for the review reading unit and testing went well. We will begin Unit 1 in reading and Saxon phonics to support our reading program. Spelling will also begin next week. Be looking for a few graded assessments and class assignments.

We have been learning about community workers in social studies and the human life cycle in science. We mummified apple slices using various natural additives to preserve them. We uncovered them and had a great observation and discussion this week about our scientific results. The life cycle of plants is going to be the focus next week and we will be growing micro-greens.

In Bible, we will be reading about two strong biblical characters; Joseph and Moses.

Our first math assessment is this Friday and no worries, we will learn it all at school. Planned for math next week will be lessons including the acting out "some went away" story problems.

About homework, I grew up playing outside after school, doing homework, dinner with my family and bathing before a decent bedtime. My own personal children also followed in that practice and are successful in life. This developed good work ethics, established the importance of an education and reinforced what was in the process of long-term memory. However, others may disagree. Shoot me an email and let me know how homework is going so far. My email is dleblanc@sothfamily.org
Thank you for choosing us!
